PREFACE.

The line of Copper here offered is most remarkable, and has, as to rarities, never been equalled in this country. Nearly every piece is either rare or in fine condition, and is, in many instances, catalogued for the first time.

A large portion of these coins are from my own cabinet, and have been for years highly prized by me as the gems of my collection.

They were obtained with great difficulty, and in many instances it is exceedingly doubtful if they could ever be duplicated.

As an opportunity to complete sets which many collectors already own, all but the rare ones, the present cannot be excelled. Read the following pages carefully and you will find the missing rarity there.

As heretofore, I have sedulously avoided an over-description as to condition, and collectors will, in every instance, find the coin fully equal to my representations.

My next sale, which will occur in March, will be a continuation of the present and will be made up of coins not previously described in my catalogues, being, as in this instance, largely from my own cabinet.

[Note.—The appearance of the Arabic language upon Sicilian coins needs, perhaps, a word of explanation to those who are not familiar with the early history of the island. Sicily was conquered by the Aghlabe Caliphs A. H., 216 (A. D, 838). At that time they had made themselves masters of the whole of Northern Africa, also of Spain, Sardinia and Malta, and had even invaded the suburbs of Rome. They were succeeded by the Fatimite Dynasty, who, with some changes, held Sicily until it was wrested from them by Roger the Norman in 1085, who then became Count of Sicily, his son, Roger II. being declared king in 1130. During the two centuries of Mahommedan rule the Arabic language came into general use, so much so that it was for many years considered necessary to use it on the coinage. This practice ceased, however, at the beginning of the 13th century.
